

NEWS FROM DALLAS

The Columbian Club opened its informal season with a Halloween dance Saturday evening. The ball room was elaborately festooned with streamers of black and yellow. A border of black cats, goblins and witches ran around the entire room. Numbers of jack-o'-lanterns covered the center and side lights. The feature of the decoration was the arrangement of the stage. A rickety board fence was erected across the front of the stage, and banked behind with corn stalks, giving the effect of a deep field. Before the fence a witch bent over her caldron, beneath which burned a red light. Real pumpkins and vines were placed in front of the fence. When the guests entered the ball room all was dark save the light from a large yellow moon above the corn. Then red lights shown from the eyes of four black cats perched on the fence and from beneath the witch's kettle. The jack-o'-lantern lights on the stage and around the room were turned on later.

Supper was served in the dining-room at 11 p. m. to about 150 guests. Black and yellow decorations were used, and the favors were bonbon containers bearing standing witches and goblins and concealing squawker balloons.
